The collection included items such as shirts, posters, and albums that were part of the Grateful Dead's extensive career, which spanned the late 1960s to the early 2000s. The items were sold to raise funds for various causes, including the American Cancer Society and the Make-A-Wish Foundation. The memorabilia included rare and unique pieces, such as the Grateful Dead's first recording session in 1966 and the band's official album covers from the early days of their career.

In addition to the items for sale, the auction also included a large selection of the band's original art, including paintings and drawings by members of the band. The art was created during the band's early years, and it was sold to raise funds for the American Cancer Society.

The auction was organized by the Grateful Dead's official merchandise company, which had been selling memorabilia for the past 15 years. The company had previously sold items for various causes, including the American Cancer Society, the Make-A-Wish Foundation, and the American Red Cross.

The event was held at the Reno Hilton, and it was attended by many of the band's fans, who had traveled from across the country to participate in the auction. The items were sold to raise funds for various causes, including the American Cancer Society, the Make-A-Wish Foundation, and the American Red Cross.
